Gasohol To Be Put To Practical Test

Gasohol, the motor fuel gaining daily attention, will be put to a practical test next month by the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation.

Under the guidance of the Virginia Highway and Transportation Research Council, the department will start using gasohol in vehicles in its Charlottesville residency.

Vehicles at two area maintenance headquarters within the residency will use the gasohol for a period of six months. Vehicles at two other area headquarters will continue to use lead-free gasoline as control vehicles for the research study in order to make valid comparisons of the two fuels.

The tests will involve about 70 vehicles, including automobiles, trucks, graders, and other maintenance vehicles. Daily fuel and maintenance records will be kept for each vehicle to permit a comparison at the end of the test period, according to Michael M. Sprinkel, research engineer with the council.

A 10,000-gallon tank has been installed at the department's Culpeper district headquarters to store the ethyl alcohol that will be mixed with gasoline to be delivered to the area headquarters. The fuel will be 90 percent lead free gasoline and 10 percent ethyl alcohol.

The data sheets on each vehicle will be used to record fuel usage, mileage, vehicle maintenance, and any performance problems. Some of the vehicles also will be tested on a dynamometer to measure engine exhausts for pollutants and to check the accuracy of the vehicle's speedometer.

In addition to the vehicle testing, the council's chemistry laboratory will test fuel samples for ethanol content, fuel separation, and water tolerance. Tests also will establish the relationship between water and ethanol/gasoline contents for the range of temperatures and gasolines that will be encountered in Virginia.

Studies in the use of the fuel mixture also are under way elsewhere. The State of Nebraska is studying use of the fuel under fleet conditions, and both Massachusetts and Rhode Island have started initial plans for similar studies. In addition, Massachusetts Institute of Technology is cooperating on research with Chevron Research Company, and another study is under way at the University of Santa Clara, Calif.

Commonwealth Banks, Inc. Shareholders Held Meeting

Area shareholders of Commonwealth Banks, Inc. met Wednesday, May 30, at the Lynchburg Fine Arts Center to review actions taken at the corporation's annual shareholders' meeting held May 15 in Richmond.

Highlights of the Richmond meeting discussed yesterday were the adoption of a new name, Central Fidelity Banks, Inc., to be effective June 1, 1979 and the adoption of a stock and thrift plan. Alvin R. Clements, chairman of the corporation's board, went over Central Fidelity's long and short range goals, pointing out that the state has been divided into five marketing regions in order to better serve the consumers and businesses in each area. He said that by the end of 1979, Central Fidelity will consist of five banks headquartered in Lynchburg, Richmond, Norfolk, Fairfax County and Charlottesville.

Carroll L. Saine, holding company president, who spoke on the company's financial highlights, noted that Central Fidelity, the state's sixth largest bank holding company, has had five years compound growth in net income after securities transactions that places it second in Virginia. Saine also said that in the first quarter of 1979, the company had had an increase in operating income per share before securities transactions of 29.6 percent.

Central Fidelity Banks, Inc. is a $1.7 billion company which was formed December 31, 1978 as a result of the consolidation of Fidelity American Bankshares, Inc. of Lynchburg and Central National Corporation of Richmond.

Vietnam Veterans' Week

The week of May 28 through June 3 has been proclaimed in honor of Vietnam War Veteran It has been almost ten years for me and I now take my turn. I feel this is long overdue and I believe that other veterans agree. It disturbs me that only heros of the Vietnam era, the ones who served in uniform, have either been totally ignored or portrayed as some have said, as junkies, crazy psychos or as too dumb to find their way to Canada.

Do you know what it is like to be a pawn in the political chess board while seeing the likes of Jane Fonda and ramsey Clark aiding the enemy? Do you know what it is like to lead troops in a no-win situation while the political leaders who committed your in the first place their courage and ran like so many rabbits in a brush fire?

Do you know what it is like to see the national media focus on the antics of the pampered social misfits and portray the uniformed troops (my troops) as the villian in a nad movie?

Do you know what it's like to be a Survivor Assistance Officer in a situation wherein the mother's only son died in combat and she wants to believe that he did not die in vain?

The dead cannot be brought back but let us honor their memory as the true heros they were. We cannot replace the feet, the legs, hands and the eyes lost but we can let these men know that they are are among America's best and that we owe them a debt of gratitude.

For those of us who don't carry the scars of Vietnam, all you need do is assure us that this disgrace will never happen again lest Americans honor also have been a fatality of Vietnam.

A soldier understands war and also that death is a possible consequence but he cannot understand or accept dishonor, even if the politicans do, America's performance on the world stage since Vietnam, however, causes me to wonder if the word "honor" has lost its meaning to those who are supposed to be our leaders.

"America", honor the heros of Vietnem as the honorable and proper thing to do and henceforth let us demand the quality leadership which will never permit us to wallow in the gutter again.
